

To Whom it May Concern:

Martin Krafft was a clinician for my CS21 class at Swarthmore College in the fall of 2000. I went to clinic every week and although all of the clinicians were good, I enjoyed and learned the most from the clinics with Martin. Martin not only helped me discover the bugs in my programs, he challenged me to find more efficient and dynamic solutions. He taught me concepts that I would see in my CS class the following semester in a way that made them exciting and accessible. When I was frustrated with or bored by the assignment and felt like giving up I knew that I could come to clinic and Martin would help me find my problem, challenge me in new and exciting ways, and generally increase my interest in Computer Science. I strongly and enthusiastically recommend Martin as a clinician or teacher of Computer Science.

Sincerely,
